The New York Evening Post in copying this statement, in detail, very well observes:

"It will be seen by the above statement that the divorce of Bank and State is complete. There are country which are subject to the draft of the Trea- sic. surer. Some sums yet remain in the Banks for which drafts have been issued, but the money has not, it appears, been as yet taken out. Never was the Treasury of the United States in a more impregnable position. It is beyond the reach of all those influences which Banks and Bankers use, in order to make a profit. And we may well say never were the United States so independent as on this day.
